

His dream was to be able to walk on the streets and not get weird looks or someone telling him you can't go there - it's for whites only. Jadon

Dr. King wanted peace and his dream was peace between all people. Savanna

Dr. King wanted to change the world and stop racism by making black people equal with white people. Racism and ignorance, unfortunately continues to divide us today, but I still people trying to pursue his dream in my community. We can pursue the dream by helping to stop racism and ignorance and by continuing to protest. We can try to help out to stop racism, because racism hurts my heart when I keep seeing it. I am going to try to stop this madness and really listen closely to what others are saying. If we all really try to stop racism and stop being ignorant, we can all do it together. Makhii

Dr. King's dream was to stop racism. In today's world, racism is still a thing and it was never gone. That's how we have the BLM movement so we can stop racism and so us as black people can stop being judged for the color of our skin. - Lennox

I see "the dream" in our community - it's people of all ethnicities playing and getting along together - not like it was back then. Jackson

The dreams of Doctor King was for there to be peace between the whites and the African Americans. He would be pleased with how the world is today and would know he made a difference. - Louis

Dr. Kings dream isn't yet realized because of everything that is happening today. Even though colored people are able to walk around freely, it's always another person that is dead the next day and it's really sad. It's either police brutality or racism or even us just killing each other. Janiyah

Dr. King wanted African American and Caucasian people to get along and have no hatred towards each other and for everyone to be equal. Ravi

My cousins pursue Dr. King's dream by being nice to everyone, and they are kind to everyone. - Sayge
